Helen T. McCullough
Founder & President, Arboretum Ethics

Many would argue that the proverbial “glass ceiling” is beginning to crack for today’s women. The number of women CEOs is slowly rising. The 2008 elections almost saw a woman presidential candidate and a woman vice-president. However, while women are moving up in management positions in the corporate world, they are sometimes left out of the decisions made on the golf course or at happy hour. This lecture will examine the ethical implications of making key business decisions in social settings where some team members are not invited—and sometimes not even allowed.

Helen T. McCullough, is the founder and president of Arboretum Ethics, as key client advocate, she develops custom projects advising and informing clients on a wide variety of ethical matters. She leads these projects according to her personal values based on treating stakeholders honestly, fairly and with the utmost respect. Ms. McCullough began her career in the technology field after graduating from University of Illinois with a BS of Mathematics and Computer Science. She spent the next 30 years in software development and technology integration specializing in financial applications. She possesses an MBA in Finance from DePaul University and an MS in Organizational Leadership and Ethics from St. Edward's University.
